HONGKONG, AUGUST 20TH, 1888:

As the time for the appearance of the Es timates approaches the question is being asked whether the promised reduction of taxation is likely to take place next year. The Governor some time ago expressed himself as being anxious to be able to recommend The MAPS and PLANS have been mostly a reduction, and now that the Opium Farm has been let for such a substantial advance on the present rent: Hi Excellency will, we trust, find himself in a position to carry out his desire. The revenue derived from the Opium Farm at present $182,400 a year. Under the new lease which will begin to run in March next, the rent is $89,800 per month, or $477,600 per annum, an increase of $295,200. Next year owing to the old lease not expiring until March, the increase for the year will be about $220,000 only. This, however, is more than ample to cover a reduction in the house tax from 13 to 10 per cent, The rateable value of the whole colony is $3,050,790. and the amount of the rates under the existing assessment $377,090; for the City of Victoria alone the figures are $2,722,605, and $353,755 respectively. In the villages the rates wary from 7 to 87 per cent. A reduction of 8 per cent, in the Cit of Victoria and a proportionate reduction in the villages would bring the total amount the rates down to something under $300,00 say $275,000. This would show a loss to the revenue of $102,490, against which may be set the increase of $220,800 in the revenue from the Opinin Farm, leaving the Treasury more than $100,000 to the good on the combined income from these two sources. His argues till doomsday he will not be able Excellency will, therefore, have little besitation, we should imagine, in recommending 29,000,000. the Legislative Council to pass the necessary resolution for a reduction of the rates, more especially as the present revenue is more than sufficient to cover the ordinary, expenditure of the colony and the principle of paying for extraordinary public works by loan Bombay, left Singapore on Saturday for this has been approved.

More credit is due to the parts, but he did well what fell to him, and received performers on this occasion insamuch as the piece is not all that sould be desired. That it has increased undoubtedly, but in England took part in this inhuman deed, is a punishment is certainly of the most diplomatic nature. Despite, however, these drawbacks, the Company worked hard and put their whole hearts into the piece, and when the curtain fell on the first act the success of the piece, so far as the performers were concerned, was assured, while a waggon might have been filled with the floral tributes which were offered by a section of an appreciative and admiring audience. The piece had evidently been well rehearsed, and although once or twice the assistance of the prompter was requisitioned, such postaged, the dresses being pretty and appropriate, Mr. Charles Stuart Leckie, manager of the | while the gallery scene in Act II. was well ar-The plot of "Ruddigore" is thoroughly Gil-

What makes the matter harder in his case is that he is not the rightful heir, for he has an elder brother, who, to avoid this fate, has settled in the village under the name of Robin Oakapple, and who is in love with Rose, but whose modesty prevents him making any declaration. As Deme Hannah conciudes the legend of the curse Rose herself enbook on etiquette, to which she constantly refers whenever a point arises to learn how she is to act. cepted by Rose. He next discovers to Sir Dospard that Robin is the real hoir to the estates and the attendant curse, and Sir Despard denounces Robin before the whole village, and insists on his assuming his nights and title. In this scene appears Mad Margaret, who is in love with Sir Despard, and who is driven to distraction by her fatal passion. The second scene is laid in the portrait gallery of the mansion of Ruddigore. Here we find Robin, who has assumed his rightful name, and who is overcome with the terrible fate which now pursues him. He has been a baronet for about a week; and has committed daily what he, in his innocent state of mind, deems a crime. Not so, however, his more hardened ancestors who soom his socalled crimes as more every day occurrences, and stepping from their frames donounce him, his immediate prodocessor, Sir Roderic Murgatroyd, leading the van. His ancestors demand that he shall commit some crime worthy of the name on pain of enduring the most awful agonies. Robin refuses for a time, until, at the command of Sir Roderic, the agonies commence, when he yields and agrees at their request to carry off a lady. He deputes his faithful servant, Old Adam, to carry out the plan. Old Adam presuming that any Lady will do, abducts Dame Hannah, and brings her to the Castle. When taken into the presence of Robin, Hannah resents the insult in a very forcible manuer, produces two poniards, insists on a duel, which is refused by Robin, who, just as she is about to stab him, is resoued by Sir Roderic, who once more steps out of his frame. It appears that Sir Roderic is the wicked baronst for whose sake Dame Hannah has foresworn matrimony, was and some love passages ensue between the two. Robin then enters, rips with an idea that has of men on strike. Red flags were displayed, and struck him, and which solves the problem of how not to commit a crime each day and yet remain alive. The rule is that if any descendant refuses A general charge was made by the Police and to commit a crime he dies, thus practically by refusing to do so, committing suicide. Now suicide being in the eyes of the law a crime, the baronet by refusing to commit crime, knowing death to be inevitable, really commits the crime. The solution is ingenious, even perhaps logical, but on the spur of the moment is not easy to grasp-Robin's snoestors, however, see it apparently directly and all ends well. Robin secures Lord Salisbury at the Mansion House said Rose, who prefers a virtuous baronet to a bo'sun's mate, and Richard consoles himself with As Robin Cakupple Mr. Sheridan had a whole round of the characters which Mr. Fisher Lord Salisbury concluded by sulogizing the bas played, we are of opinion that none into this part, of which we hardly, judging by previous performances, thought him capable, and gave a rendering of the part which not only delighted his audience, but of which he has reason to be proud. His singing throughout was consistently good, while in his hornpipe in Act I. he revealed talent which no one ever before supposed house. That most useful actor, Mr. Snich, played well as Sir Despard Murgatroyd, making the contrast between the wicked baronet, and in Act with chorus "Oh why am I moody and sad." As hearty applicase for his rendering of the duet with Mr. Sheridan "I once was as meak as a new-born say the same as of Mr. Fisher. No part has she assumed in which she appeared to such advantage as Rose Maybud. Miss Hare grasped the situation from the first, and entered fully into the spirit and humour of the part. The duct with quaintly humorous in parts, is not so striking Mr. Sheridan, already alluded to, "Poor little maid, poor little man " not only owed its success to the inimitable acting displayed by Miss Mand Hare but it revealed to her audience that she has a fund of dry, quiet humour for which no one, we think, ever before gave her credit. The part of Mad Margaret is one of the most difficult in the piece, and it could not have found a better exponent than Miss Flo Morrison. Always entering thoroughly into whatever part she plays, always identifying herself with her part, and being thoroughly oblivious of her audience, Miss Morrison never falls into the fault of "playing to the gallery," and gives always an ideal rendering of any character she assumes: currences were rare. The piece was carefully Her style in Acts I. and II. has to be so theroughly dissimilar that the rendition of the part is by no means an easy task, but Miss Morrison, using the talent which she undoubtedly possesses, and backing it up with a will that sooms diffibertian in characteristics, the central figure beculties gave an interpretation of the rôle which ing a baronet who, in consequence of a curse laid was deserving of all praise. As Dame Hannah on one of his ancestors, has every day to commit Miss Eva Learnington was, as usual, estisfactory, and her singing of " There grows a little flower well, and although they had not a great deal audience. ropean and Eurasian children at schools shows that the working of the grant-in-aid system has been productive of satisfactory results. Passing to expenditure on Education, it is stated that where private enterprise is able to supply the educational wants of the people, the policy of Government is to retire from the field of direct instruction, and by reasonable subventions of money, help the efforts of independent institutions. Government concur in the necessity of keeping the inspecting agency separate from the teaching staff, and recruiting it to a large extent

The question of substituting local agency for European Professors of Colleges is not yet one for practical discussion. On the question of recruitment of such Professors for short periods, instead of for long periods of peneionable service, His Excellency in Council awaits the opinions of Naguaki ... 22.07 Local Governments but is inclined to recommend a trial of the system to a moderate extent. Houghong ... The importance of Training Schools for Teachers is insisted on; and regarding technical education, it is suggested that Committees of educational experts and professional men should ho appointed to make practical suggestions for furthering the scheme.

The question of discipline and moral training is considered most important in connection with education in India at the present day, and Local Governments are being consulted regarding the preparation of moral text-books.

SIMLA, 23rd July. Lord Lanedowne leaves England for India or the 8th November, and will take over office from Lord Dufferin at Calcutta on the 2nd or 3rd December. Lord Dufferin may make a shor our in November; but this is not yet settled. A BAILWAY PASSENGER BUNNING AMUCK.

There was a serious case of stabbing and running amuck on the Rajpootana-Malwa Railway on the night of the 23rd inst. A Bokharan on his way home after a pilgrimage to Mecca was in a third class compartment in which a railway porter entered at Malakhera Station, between Delhi and Bandiqui. The two had quarrel about the former occupying too much space, and just as the train entered the next station of Moha, the Yarkandi drew a clasp knife and stabbed the porter in the throat. The latter escaped from the compartment, but died in a few minutes. The Yarkandi then turned his attention to the other passengers, all Hindoos, and stabbed two of thom, one very severely. The station master on hearing the disturbance came to the compartment and received a stab in his hand The European driver of the train and an En rasian passenger then entered the compartment and very pluckily seized and disarmed the rufflan, who is now in custody. THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

SIMLA, 25th July. At the Council to-day, Bills were introduced to amond the Indian Telegraph Act and to repeal the Contagious Diseases Act XIV. of 1868. SANITATION IN INDIA.

SIMLA, 27th July. An important Resolution appears in the Gazette of India on sanitation. It has been stated that the main obstacles which have hither-Bey's provisions were scarce, and that ignorance of the masses, the want of executive agencies, and of funds. In urban areas, Government is glad to think that the question now presents less difficulty than formerly. In rural areas, the case is very different, and the executive rules framed from time to time have done little good. But the District and Local Boards Acts have provided Government, for the first time, with means of creating an agency for executing sanitary reform in rural areas. It appears to the Government of India that sanitary boards should be established in each province, through which the Local Governments can operate: Suggestions are made for raising funds to meet our. rept expenditure, and the question of granting loans for permanent works of an expensive na-

"TIT-BITS" FROM MANY TABLES. Mr. George Russell has just published (Blackwood and Sons) a little volume Recollections of Some Wise and Witty Men and Women "-the siftings, he tells us of notebooks in which he has always entered good things he has beard at dinner. "It has been a pleasant labour for me," says Mr. Russell "to put these fragments together, and would fain hope that they may induce some to do their best, while enlarging the sphere, and improving the quality of society conversation, to 'take a note! of what they hear, and so to furnish material for biography and "tit-bits," selected at random :-

Three years ago two young couple, disgusted with the crowded state of the rookery, resolved to establish a colony in some elms as new growing in my garden just opposite my study-window. The distance from the rookery to these elms is hardly two bundred yards, but the patriarchs of the rookery did not approve of the design. A council was summoned to debate the matter, and the conduct of the headstrong young people was discussed for several days with much animation. Ultimately it was decided that the proceedings of the foolbardy young people ought not to be allowed to go on, and an elderly

But the young ones PAINTS, OILS, VARNISH. thought they knew better than their elders, and paid no attention to the representations of the deputation. Accordingly, they were left alone till the nests were completed; and then the whole rockery came down to put justice MACHINES, BICYCLE WHEELS FOR into execution. The nests were demolished twig by twig; and the young folks, seeing that resistance was hopeless, had to build their nests in the churchyard elms.

Next spring the rebellion was renewed, the emigrants being reinforced by another pair, probably their own offspring; and three mests were built in my trees. Another council was now called in the rookery; the same decision was come to; the remonstrance were repeated, and were again disregarded. But this time no punishment was decreed: the old rooks evidently coming to the conclusion that it would be better to let obstinate young people find out for themselves the error of their ways. They had done their duty and would do no more. One nest, close to a public road, was abandoned; but the remainder were completed, the eggs were laid, and four young birds were hatched and reared in safety. No ill-consequences baving ensued, this spring six nests were touilt in my garden; the young rooks having, I imagine, found mates in the parent rookery. Such an event as the establishment of a new Fingle Horn, Forte, Vox Humans, Octave rookery caused some talk in the village; and thus it was that I discovered the motive of Foot Blow Pedals, Blow Handle, Pedals the old rooks' remonstrances. Several years 1-Set 30 Notes Pedal Reeds, 16 feet Pitch. ago, certainly not less than fourteen, a similar attempt to form a new colony had been made; and my predecessor, annoyed by the noise of the adventurers, had ordered them to be shot. Evidently, that circumstance had been remembered. And thus several facts seem to be established; the longevity of rooks, the retentiveness of their memories, their possession of a language, or at least means of communicating ideas, and the establishment of laws for the welfare of the community. Rooks are not destitute of moral sentiments, or at all events of laws of social morality. There is a well-authenticated story of a pair of rooks being detected in stealing sticks from neighbouring nests to save the trouble of breaking them off for themselves. A High Court of Justice was impauelled, the guilty pair were tried and condemned, and their nests-by that time nearly completed-were pulled down as a punishment and a warning. It is well known that when rooks are feeding in a field sentinels LARGE STOCKS OF EVERY DESCRIP are stationed on the summits of hedgerowtrees to look out for the app roach of foes; it Address: Care of Mesers Kwone Sung & Co., 1842 BK is not so well known that the sentinels are changed from time to time. Meanwhile, the rest feed on in security, wasting no time in looking out for dangers. Now a blackbird or a thrush loses more than half his feedingtime in glancing about to discover whether any enemy is approaching; so we see what an excellent arrangement is this of the rooks." Rucks lay two eggs in each nest. The young birds grow so fast and require so much food, that the parents would probably be THE Undersigned having been appointed unable to support a larger family. The young rooks are hatched just at the time of the spring tillage, when grubs are easily to be procured by following the plough. The great fut white larva of the maybug (Melolontha vulgarie) and the wire-worm, which is the larva of a skipjack (Elater obscurus) form, believe, the staple of the food procured from the furrows. - In about a fortnight the young birds getout of the pests and begin to associate. generally on the leeward trees of the rookery. All the young rooks caw for food when any history." Here are some of Mr. Russell's old bird approaches; but the old birds know their own young, and pick them out from the rest in spite of the vociferous appeals of their causing on the neighbouring boughe. In FITHE Undersigned, Agents for the above another week the old birds begin to teach the young ones to fly. A savoury grab i brought to a bough a few feet to leeward of an i.in writing a word that she had murdered the young rook, who is encouraged to "make an effort" and flap across to his parent. But very soon they begin to fly from tree to tree or wheel round in short circles. When of a proverb was felicitous (" The wit of one they are able to fly as far as the feedinggrounds (perhaps a mile away), each of the old birds takes reparate charge of one of the young ones and teaches it how to find grube.
